KVM under CentOS 7. I was able to get it working on a VirtualBox virtual machine, but not under KVM. KVM is really working, I can create new VMs and delete them etc, and I can ssh into them. The problem is that KVM doesn't provide the VirtualBox virtualisation APIs, so the VirtualBox kernel modules can't load. So I'm kind of stuck. If anybody can help, I'd be really grateful. A: I was able to get it working. I installed the base CentOS7 image and the network tools and the software I needed. Then I installed KVM from the KVM package and started a CentOS7 VM, and added the network parameters. I set the network parameters to 'bridged' and did not specify a 'netmask'. Then I started a 'centos' image in KVM and added mongod and the rest of the needed packages, and launched the mongo command line application. Voila! You can do this with any of the virtualisation packages provided by CentOS. A: I've been meaning to try to do this for awhile. I've used another virtualization solution in the past, which was pretty straight forward (VirtualBox). The first step in my research was to figure out how to bridge a private interface to another virtual machine's network card. This is documented here in the VirtualBox documentation:

The present invention relates to the art of abrasive blasting and, more particularly, to an improved method and apparatus for automatically or semi-automatically controlled transfer of abrasive blasting from a supply container to a remote blasting apparatus. It is conventional to apply blasting to stone, concrete or other hard surfaces for a number of purposes. In such operations, an abrasive-containing supply container is supported on the ground and a blast nozzle is movably mounted at the container. A blower is connected to the container to inject air through the nozzle to propel the abrasive material toward the hard surface. It is known to mount a supply container on a boom structure, the nozzle and the blower being mounted at a distal end of the boom structure. The nozzle and blower are operable to move in
